Hello envelio team,

Thank you for a clear posting. "One of the first people dedicated to this area" is the line that made me apply. Building a partner function from zero in new markets is the job I have done most often, and probably the one I do best.

The closest match is Watching That, a London streaming-data company with no partnerships function. I built it, then signed Brightcove as their largest partner after a 3-4 year chase, then three more across Europe/US/APAC. At Livepeer I did the operating-system half of the same job (forecasting, contracting cadence, CRM, team training) and signed Tier-1 partners including Aptos ($500K).

In terms of implementation and delivery partners - at Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and agency partners across Asia and ran the regional execution of the global partner programme. That channel grew to 35% of regional pipeline whilst the region went from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR. For Encoding.com I opened APAC from a written market-entry thesis and signed the region's largest systems integrator as a delivery partner.

For "mutual value propositions, commercial models and agreements", the deal I would point to is Roche Diagnostics: an exclusive global reseller agreement for a small IoT company, seven figures on a three-year minimum, with an $80B counterparty. It stalled in Roche's legal/compliance process and got signed because I kept Roche's sponsors visible and held the founder firm on exclusivity. That channel produced the NHS sales and a ten-year OLVG contract in the Netherlands.

To be clear - the energy sector is new ground for me. What I bring is an engineer's training (MEng Electronic Engineering) and 18 years of B2B software partnerships across 15+ countries, plus the habit of building the process and the tooling myself, my own AI agents and GTM automation included.

I live in Valencia, so Spain is a market I can work from the inside, with intermediate Spanish, fully remote on CET. I ran a business across borders and time zones for four years from a 40-foot boat, so remote and self-directed is simply how I work.

So - happy to hop on a 20-minute call to talk through which markets and partner types come first.

Thanks again and looking forward to hearing from you,
Ben Morrell
