Dear Hiring Team,

I have run the mandate you are describing. The Brightcove region I took over had talented sellers, a reactive account base, and pipeline that leaned on inbound. As Vice President I built it into a data-driven sales organisation of 20+ people across new business, account management, and pre-sales, and grew recurring revenue from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR.

The specifics map closely to your brief. We moved account management from reactive to proactive with segmentation and strategic account planning; average account value went from $40K to $250K+ ACV. Pipeline stopped depending on marketing because we hunted above run-rate. I beat quota every year at 120%+, and my team closed the company's largest global deal, $12M over three years. All of it was built through managers rather than around them: I managed them directly, kept turnover under 10%, and promoted 80% of our AEs from within.

Two things on your nice-to-have list are, for me, core. I build revenue operations myself. At Livepeer I stood up the whole commercial operating system, from forecasting through deal and contracting cadence, with the CRM as the single frame of reference, so a HubSpot implementation is work I know from the inside. The same goes for AI in the sales process: I ship my own outbound automation, lead scoring, and AI agents, which means I know what these tools will and will not do for a team. On partner economics, I structured a 7-figure, 3-year exclusive global reseller agreement through the Roche Diagnostics channel that produced multiple NHS wins and a 10-year contract in the Netherlands.

I have also run a business across borders and time zones, literally from a 40-foot boat. Remote and self-directed is simply how I work, and monthly time in Northwest England is easy to commit to.

I would welcome a conversation about what the first two quarters of this role should deliver.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
