Hello Rupert,

Thank you for leaving the door open to speculative applications.

Your expansion announcement said Nimbus was built and proven in the UK and is now going global. Taking a product that works at home into the next market is most of what I have done for the last twelve years.

At Brightcove I ran Asia as VP. We opened Vietnam, Taiwan, Thailand and the Philippines with local partners ($2M+ new ARR), I formally opened the India office, and the region grew from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR whilst I led it.

Through Ziplake I then opened new regions for B2B technology companies after their home-market success. For Encoding.com that was APAC from a written thesis. Qualified pipeline grew 1200% and we signed the region's largest systems integrator.

The closest parallel to your customers is probably Roche. I negotiated an exclusive global reseller agreement for a small Australian IoT company through Roche Diagnostics (seven figures, three-year minimum) and took it through their legal and compliance process. I'd guess RWE and Vattenfall buy in a similar way.

Your team page is strong on engineering and finance. I couldn't see anyone leading commercial and partnerships for Germany, Ireland and the US. That is the seat I'd like to talk about - first reference customers in each market, plus the trading/route-to-market partners around them.

To be clear - energy markets are new ground for me. I'm an engineer by training (MEng) and started in live broadcast, including sole delivery of Nine Network's Beijing 2008 Olympics.

Today I build my own AI agents and integrations, so I'd be comfortable taking an AI-enabled control and trading platform into a customer's engineering review.

I'm based in Valencia, two hours from London and one hour ahead. I'd plan to be in Blackfriars a few days a month, and in Germany or Ireland whenever the work needs it. Market entry mostly happens in the new market anyway.

CV attached. So - happy to hop on a call to talk through how I'd approach the first two markets.

Thanks again and looking forward to hearing from you,
Ben Morrell
