Dear Remote Embedded team,

I have spent my career making partner-sold revenue happen, from both sides of the motion. As VP Asia at Brightcove, I built the partner channel that drove 35% of regional pipeline while growing the region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR, exceeding quota every year. Then, advising IoT company BinaryTech, I landed and ran an exclusive global reseller agreement through Roche Diagnostics, which meant our revenue depended entirely on another company's sales organization choosing to sell our product. We made their sellers successful: enablement, cadence, incentives, executive engagement. The result was multiple NHS wins and a 10-year deal with OLVG in the Netherlands.

That second story is the job you are hiring for, in mirror image: making embedded partners' sellers increasingly independent at generating, qualifying and closing Remote opportunities, while owning the number yourself.

The rest of the spec I can evidence just as concretely. A high-performing team: I built and led a 20+ person org across Singapore, Mumbai and New Delhi, managing managers, with under 10% turnover and 80% of promotions home-grown. Operating rigor: at Livepeer I stood up the commercial operating system from scratch — forecasting, contracting cadence, CRM discipline, team training. Executive presence: I negotiated the Roche agreement with their Swiss HQ and led the team that closed Brightcove's largest global deal, ~$4M ARR. And your "AI in every role" requirement is not an aspiration for me: I build my own AI agents, MCP servers and GTM automation.

One more thing. I have worked async and remote since 2019, including four years running a business across borders and time zones, literally from a 40-foot boat. Remote's way of working is simply how I work.

I would welcome a conversation about the embedded partner portfolio and where I would start.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
