Dear Hiring Manager,

At Brightcove, partner-sourced pipeline grew to 35% of the region while I took that region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR. The partners were ISVs and agencies who learned when, how and why to bring us into a deal, which is the referral motion your posting describes, built from nothing and forecast against every quarter. That is the work I want to do for Tremendous.

I have started from a blank page more than once. At Watching That I stood up the partnerships function from scratch and signed Brightcove, a partner the company had chased for three or four years. For a medical IoT company with no European channel, I went after Roche Diagnostics cold and negotiated an exclusive global reseller agreement through their channel: seven figures on a three-year minimum, inside an $80B organisation. Roche's process moved at Roche's pace, so I made us the easiest counterparty they had while holding firm on exclusivity and the minimum commitment. Those terms are why the partner kept referring, and they produced multiple NHS sales and a ten-year contract with OLVG. Incentives that keep a partner engaged are a design problem, and I have solved it with a much bigger company across the table.

Your posting asks for someone who notices where structure, tooling or process is missing and creates it. I do that literally. When my consultancy needed GTM tooling that did not exist, I wrote it: LLM agents, an MCP server, outbound automation and lead scoring, all in production. I would rather build the partner portal, the referral tracking and the enablement docs than wait for a ticket to clear.

On location: I know the posting says the Americas. I am in Valencia, on CET, and I noticed you are hiring a founding European sales team on that same time zone. A partnerships lead in Europe could open referral partners for that team while running the US motion on the afternoon overlap, and I would be engaged through a non-Spanish entity. If the shape of the role matters more than the map, I would like to make that case.

I have run a business across borders and time zones, literally from a 40-foot boat. Documentation-first and low-meeting is how I already work.

I would welcome 20 minutes on the charter and how you are measuring year one.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
