Hi Karl,

Thank you for the opportunity to put myself forward for the Partnerships role.

Your Power of the Home piece makes the case well. The flexibility is already sitting in people's driveways and lofts, but it only reaches the market if the supplier/OEM rolling it out gets the proposition and the onboarding right. That rollout is the part I have spent my career on.

At Brightcove I ran Asia with sales, partnerships, solutions and customer success in one team. Average account value went from $40K to $250K+ ACV through account growth and expansion, and the region went from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR whilst I was VP.

The closest parallel to your B2B2C model is probably Roche. I negotiated an exclusive global agreement for a medical IoT company to resell through the Roche Diagnostics channel. Then I worked with 30+ Roche people on enablement and account work so their own sales teams could sell it.

That produced multiple NHS sales and a ten-year contract with OLVG in the Netherlands. A lot of what made it work was getting field feedback back to the product team quickly.

In terms of the technical component - I'm an engineer by training (MEng) and started in broadcast infrastructure, so I'm comfortable working directly with your engineers. I also build my own tooling (AI agents, an MCP server, lead scoring/dashboards etc.), which is useful for the data-driven side of the role.

To be clear on one thing - I'm based in Valencia and work remotely, which I recognise isn't the 2-3 days a week in Farringdon the posting describes. London is a two-hour flight and I would plan to be there for onboarding, retreats and partner meetings. If that rules me out, better we both know early.

Happy to hop on a call to talk through any of the above.

Thanks Karl,
Ben Morrell
