Hi Janis,

Thank you for the opportunity to put myself forward for Head of Partnerships. One relationship opening dozens of accounts, with partners doing the delivery, is close to the partner model I have built most.

At Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and agency partners across Asia. The channel grew to drive 35% of regional pipeline, and sales forecast against that number every quarter.

Over the same years I led the region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR as VP. So I have been the leader whose forecast depended on what reps put into the CRM. That is the problem Weflow sells into.

In terms of structuring the deals - the closest thing to a PE preferred-vendor arrangement I have done is probably Roche. A small medical IoT company had no European channel. I got to an exclusive global reseller agreement through Roche Diagnostics, seven figures over a three-year minimum.

The work was mostly getting it through Roche's legal and compliance process whilst holding firm on exclusivity and the minimum. Revenue then came through the partner: NHS sales and a ten-year contract with OLVG.

On the agency and SI side, I built the partnerships function at Watching That from scratch and signed APAC's largest systems integrator for Encoding.com. Before Brightcove I spent two years inside an integrator, so I have sat on that side of the table.

To be clear - I have not worked in private equity. I have advised 20+ B2B SaaS founders and run M&A due diligence at Livepeer, and I think that gets me most of the way to a credible conversation with an operating partner.

I also build my own GTM tooling (AI agents, CRM automation, lead scoring), which helps when the partners are RevOps/CRM people.

I work fully remote from Valencia, two hours from London and an hour off its time zone.

Happy to hop on a call to talk through how you see the PE side developing.

Thanks Janis,
Ben Morrell
