Dear Michael,

At Brightcove the partner channel grew to source 35% of regional pipeline. The business forecast against that number every quarter, which is the only reason it meant anything. Your posting makes partner-sourced and partner-influenced ARR the primary success metric for this role, and that is why I am writing.

I have spent 18 years in B2B SaaS, most of it on the indirect side. At Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and agency partners, ran regional execution of the global partner programs, and grew the region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR while that channel compounded underneath it. The program did not exist when I arrived. I built it.

Your posting is honest that structure, process and ecosystem all get built from the ground up here, and that is the work I keep being handed. At Watching That I stood up the partnerships function from scratch and signed Brightcove, a partner they had chased for three or four years. Representing a medical IoT company with no European channel, I went after Roche Diagnostics cold and negotiated an exclusive global reseller agreement through their channel: 7 figures, three-year minimum, built across more than 30 people inside an $80B organisation. Revenue followed the signature, with multiple NHS sales and a ten-year contract with OLVG in the Netherlands. Consultancies, digital agencies and systems integrators carry a vendor only when the economics and the enablement are real. I spent two years inside a systems integrator early on, so I know what that looks like from their side of the table.

Unifyr raised to build an AI-driven partner experience platform, and this role asks for partner offerings around AI-enabled commerce. I build that kind of software myself: LLM agents, an MCP server, and GTM automation running in production. So I can sit with a partner's technical leadership and talk about what the platform actually does.

I have also been the buyer for a product like yours.

I work fully remote from Valencia. I would welcome a conversation about the charter and how you are measuring year one.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
