Dear RevenueCat team,

The line in your posting that made me apply was the one about what this role isn't: not the largest possible portfolio of partners, not the standard playbook of webinars and integration announcements. That is the argument I have been making my whole career, usually against the internal pressure to count logos.

Here is what it looks like when it works. Through Ziplake I went after a single partnership with Roche Diagnostics — an $80B counterparty, no existing channel, cold. I built the internal case, ran the outreach, and negotiated an exclusive global reseller agreement on a three-year minimum. Signing it was the easy half. What made it matter was everything after: multiple NHS sales, and a ten-year contract with OLVG in the Netherlands. One relationship, chosen deliberately and worked for years, beat any portfolio I could have assembled in the same time.

I have also done it at ecosystem scale. At Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and agency partners into a curated ecosystem that grew to source 35% of regional pipeline, while I grew the region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR as VP. And at Livepeer I built the commercial operating system underneath the partnerships — forecasting, contracting cadence, CRM, partner training — because an ecosystem nobody can measure is an ecosystem nobody will keep funding.

On the technical bar: I do not need it translated. I have an MEng, I went Senior Solutions Engineer to Technical Director to VP at Brightcove, and I build now — LLM agents, an MCP server, a Next.js platform with Stripe billing and a pricing engine behind it. I have integrated a subscription stack as the developer, which is a useful seat from which to judge which integrations are worth your engineering time.

What I would not oversell: I have not worked in the mobile app ecosystem. I have spent 18 years in API-first developer SaaS, which is adjacent, not identical, and I would rather say that now than have you find it in week three.

I would welcome a conversation.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
