Hello,

Thanks for writing this one up as a green-field brief and saying so plainly. That is the half that made me read it twice.

ElevenCreative's model partners are video and image model companies, and video infrastructure is where I have spent eighteen years. Brightcove, Encoding.com/Telestream, Livepeer, Mux, Visionular. So the generative video landscape is a market I can already read, and a model provider's engineering lead is a conversation I can hold on my own.

The closest thing I have done to this job was at Watching That, a London streaming-data company with no partnerships function. I wrote the target list, the pitch and the commercial shape, then signed Brightcove, a partner they had chased for three or four years. Three more followed across Europe/US/APAC. Same shape as this seat, pointed the other way.

On the commercial half - I turned a dormant Roche Diagnostics ($80B) relationship into an exclusive global reseller agreement, seven figures on a three-year minimum.

It stalled inside their Legal and Compliance review, which is where these quietly die. I conceded everything that was only policy at that scale and held firm on exclusivity and the minimum. That channel produced NHS sales and a ten-year contract with OLVG in Amsterdam.

At Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and technology partners and that channel drove 35% of regional pipeline, whilst I grew the region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR at 120%+ of quota.

On pricing - Encoding.com sold per minute and Livepeer sold usage-based compute, so consumption/credit economics are old ground for me.

Firstly on time zones, since you asked. I am on CET, which covers Europe and US East. Eight years based in Singapore, so Asia partner hours are a habit by now.

To be clear on what is new. I have not owned a model-provider relationship before, and I would go as far to say very few people have for long, which is probably why this is green-field.

I also build with these models rather than only buying them. LLM applications on the Claude API, AI agents, a production MCP server. "AI first" is already how I work.

Worth raising early: I am fully remote from Valencia and engaged through a non-Spanish entity, so the practical question is which entity would contract someone resident in Spain.

Happy to hop on a call to talk through any of the above. CV attached.

Thanks for your time and your consideration,
Ben Morrell
