Hello Napster team,

Thank you for the opportunity. I have spent most of my partnerships career on what happens after the signature - onboarding, enablement, activation, and then growing the partner for years. I think that is the harder half of partner management, and it is the part of partnerships work I enjoy and can add most value.

The clearest example is Roche Diagnostics. For BinaryTech, a medical IoT company with no European presence, I sourced Roche cold and negotiated an exclusive global reseller agreement. That was a startup of only 15 people dealing with an $80B business.

It ended up being signed after a long stretch in Roche's Legal and Compliance. Most of the work came after that. Keeping the right people on both sides engaged and supporting each pursuit as it came in.

That channel went on to produce multiple NHS sales and a ten-year contract with OLVG - a very large hospital group in Amsterdam.

In terms of doing it at scale - at Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and agency partners across Asia Pacific and ran regional execution of the global partner programme. Onboarding, enablement, joint business plans and partner reviews. That channel reached 35% of regional pipeline whilst I led the region from ~$4M to ~$11.5M ARR.

On structure and follow-through - at Livepeer I built the commercial operating system (forecasting, contracting cadence, CRM, team training) so every commitment had an owner and pipeline reviews started from the same numbers.

I also build AI agents and MCP servers on the Claude API myself. So I can enable a partner on an agent product as someone who has built one.

To be clear on the gap - I have not run a Microsoft co-sell motion. The Microsoft ecosystem is new to me, however activating and growing partners across EMEA/APAC is not.

I am fully remote from Valencia on CET, and happy to travel to Amsterdam and the Nordics as the partner calendar needs.

Happy to hop on a call to talk through any of the above.

Thanks for your time and your consideration,
Ben Morrell
