Dear Supabase partnerships team,

Three times a company has sent me to build a region it did not yet have. At Brightcove, headquartered in Boston, I joined a four-person Asia office and built the partner channel from nothing until it sourced 35% of regional pipeline, half a day ahead of head office. Your posting describes that job for EMEA, across all five partner motions, and that is why I am writing.

The generalist part is the part I recognise. Those Brightcove partners were 15+ ISVs and agencies, recruited into a regional ecosystem while I ran regional execution of global programs written for the US market. For Encoding.com I opened APAC from a written thesis, grew qualified pipeline 1200% and signed the region's largest systems integrator. For BinaryTech, an Australian company with no European channel, I went after Roche Diagnostics cold and negotiated an exclusive global reseller agreement through their channel: seven figures, three-year minimum, an $80B counterparty. The NHS sales and a ten-year OLVG contract in the Netherlands came out of that one agreement. Integration partners, an SI, a reseller and, through Ziplake, twenty-odd startup founders. None of it ran on the same playbook.

Two things about Supabase specifically. First, I build on the stack your integration partners live on. The site behind this letter runs on Vercel, I have a Cloudflare Worker in production, and I ship LLM applications and a production MCP server. A conversation with a partner's engineering lead about what an integration should do is one I can hold myself. Second, the timezone gap in your posting is my normal working condition rather than a warning. I have run partner functions for US companies from Singapore and now from Valencia, and I know which decisions need a synchronous call and which need a written case.

I work fully remote from Valencia, in English and intermediate Spanish, and I am available for the in-person partner and developer events the role needs across EMEA. I have also run a business across borders and time zones from a 40-foot boat, so independent is simply how I work.

I would welcome 20 minutes on where EMEA partner coverage is thinnest today.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
