Partnerships & Alliances Leader — builds the partner function from scratch

Dear Metabase team,

I've built a partnerships function from nothing before, and I'd like to do it again as your first Head of Partnerships. At Watching That I stood up the partnerships function with no playbook and signed Brightcove — a partner the company had chased for three to four years — plus several more across Europe, the US and APAC. Building the process as I go, not inheriting one, is the mode I work best in.

The part of this role I care most about is the one that's easy to get wrong: turning partner relationships into measurable pipeline, not logos on a slide. At Brightcove I recruited 15+ ISV and agency partners and ran regional execution of the global partner program, and the channel grew to 35% of regional pipeline. At Livepeer I signed Tier-1 technology partnerships including Aptos ($500K) and built the commercial operating system behind them — forecasting, contracting cadence, CRM and partner reporting — exactly the systems and cadences that turn a set of relationships into a repeatable, measurable function.

What makes me unusual for this specific role: your most important partners are AI vendors and data warehouse providers, and I build the same class of technology myself. I ship LLM agents, MCP servers and GTM automation, so I can hold a real conversation with the solutions engineers who influence deals in the field, not just the VPs who sign them. Metabase asks for someone credible at every altitude — I've been the solutions engineer and the VP, and I'm still hands-on in the stack today.

I've run a business across borders and time zones, literally from a 40-foot boat: remote and self-directed is simply how I work. I'd welcome the chance to talk about how I'd build Metabase's partner function. Everything is at benmorrell.co.

Best regards,
Ben Morrell
